ROEBOURNE SINGS ON SUNDAYS

Every second Sunday at sunset, the sound of voices, guitars and percussion drifts across the town of Roebourne thanks to a new fortnightly event 'The Sunday Session', held at the Ngarluma Yindjibarndi Foundation's Ngurin Cultural Centre.

Produced with local musicians and and young people of Roebourne, this fortnightly evening of music is open to all musicians and music lovers from beginners to emerging and professional.

Young people from the Roebourne community are producing each Sunday Session, from event management to promotion, tech support, poster design, catering and mc-ing. Leading up to the events they've been participating in Big hART workshops, building skills in event management, catering, public speaking, musician management and MC work. They've been learning new digital design and IT skills and also undertaking workshops in music making and percussion.

The first event for the year was a true community intergenerational event, bringing local musicians, community and organisations of all ages together. It attracted 80 people, with 22 local Roebourne talent performing at the session, with young people hosting and young women playing a key role in hosting the event and performance. Set against the peaceful sunset atmosphere of the open-air amphitheatre of Roebourne's Cultural Centre, people also enjoyed food prepared by local staff.

Come along this Sunday 8th April or to the next Sunday Session on 22nd April from 5-7pm to sing, watch and have a feed. It's a great way to spend your Sunday afternoon so be sure to get on down.

This event would not be possible without the support of Yirramagardu Community Association, Wirlu-murra Yindjibarndi Aboriginal Corporation, Ngarluma Yindjibarndi Foundation, Pilbara Development Commission and City of Karratha.
